

A demographer and former project manager, Nancy McGirr has more than 35 years' experience in population and development-related programs. Most recently at the Futures Group (now Palladium), she was deputy director for the $240 million USAID-funded Health Policy Project, where she played a central managerial role linking every aspect of global project operations in 42 countries, knowledge management and communications, and monitoring and evaluation with overall USAID program goals and objectives. She has a proven track record in promoting data-based decision-making, monitoring and evaluation, and knowledge management and communications. Ms. McGirr has written numerous papers and articles on topics including performance-monitoring systems, operational policies for family planning program management, and decentralization. Prior to joining the Futures Group, Ms. McGirr provided technical assistance for developing-country statisticians under the auspices of the United Nations, Westinghouse Institute for Resource Development, and the U.S. Bureau of the Census.

Retired since 2015, she has become actively involved in a range of activities at The Landings, serving as board secretary for the Women's Golf Association, playing on three tennis teams, and working on committees for the Green Thumb Club, Skidaway Audubon, Abigails, and Love Mentors. Since moving to Savannah, she and her husband, David Goslin, have been ardent supporters of the local music scene, including the ATC, the Savannah Music Festival, and the Savannah Philharmonic.
